10 WAYS MULTI-TASKING IS HARMFUL FOR YOU

Client: Cleona Britto-DSousa
Company: IWBC

As women, we believe multitasking is a must have trait. Most of us juggle numerous tasks each and every day, shuffling between our home, family, work and social responsibilities. But contrary to popular belief, multitasking is not as good a virtue or a skill it is made out to be.

While multitasking seems a great way to get a lot done at once, whilst still saving time, various studies have substantiated that multitasking makes you less - not more efficient.

What we call multitasking is actually task-switching - just doing individual actions in rapid succession. As humans we're wired to be mono-taskers when it comes to attention, concentration and productivity.

What happens when you constantly move back and forth between tasks?

1. Decreases Productivity
2. Decreases Working speed
3. Multiplies Mistakes
4. Causes Stress and overeating
5. Lessens concentration span
6. Impairs your memory and cognitive ability
7. Lowers IQ
8. Increases chances of brain damage
9. Dampens creativity

Multi-tasking proves to be even more harmful in the long run, so next time you think of multi-tasking or rather task-switching, remember that focusing on one task at a time benefits not only your work and efficiency, but also various aspects of your life, including relationships

SCHEDULE

Client: Cleona Britto-DSousa
Company: IWBC

“A Roadmap might not magically make the journey easier, but it'll ensure that you stay on the right course.”

How often do you set out on the road without a map or directions? The only time when we don't care where we end up. But when we've somewhere to be, a set destination in mind, we always have a map. Why? Because a map can get us there faster and more efficiently.

Similarly, in life, we've things to attain, milestones to achieve, short term as well as long term goals. But how many of us have a real plan to get where we want to be? Whether it is a trip, life or business, it is very easy to get lost without a properly chalked out roadmap. It would help if you organised your thoughts and goals and then set up a plan to achieve them. The best way to implement your plans is to have a suitable and systematic schedule.

Here we're only focusing on 'what' we need to do, not 'how' we're going to do it.

1. Make a list of daily tasks with the time allotted to do them.
2. Fix your call and personal appointments in advance.
3. Every month make a list of 2 negotiable and 2 non-negotiable tasks and follow it.
4. Learn to differentiate between the urgent and the important.
5. Plan in advance the daily routine tasks to save time.

These are just a few guidelines to help you start or improve your scheduling.

Share your daily schedules in the comments and let us know if this article was helpful.

One Genuine New Relationship is Worth a Fistful of Business Cards

-Susan Cain

Handing out business cards like candy but not sure if you are getting any traction out it? Well, it could be that your card is merely lying forgotten in a drawer or has been thrown away without a second thought. Now before taking offence, think about how many business cards have you kept handy? Or even if you have, do you remember the person who gave it to you? Have you ever called the numbers on business cards lying around in your drawer? The answer lies in the questions itself. So next time, before handing over your business card to someone, take time to talk to that person, introduce yourself and tell them about your company. If possible, try and include a small interesting detail about your business that will increase the recall value of your card. Only once you have established a connection, then swoop in with your card. You may end up handing out fewer cards, but definitely, the ones you do give will do some work for you.
